Recently one boy sent me a flirt on livedatesearch.com and I answered. Now we have TWO-WAY-MATCH.

Should I write him first or better to wait till he writes me?

I am interested in your opinion guys. Are you paying for the girl in the restaurant on the first date? And if she shows that she can pay herself what are you doing in this situation?

The reason of that question is that I my new boyfriend doesn't really care about paying for me, and this is quite offending. Does it mean that he is not very serious to me? Actually we just had a few dates and nothing serious has happened between us yet. What does such behavior means?

I have been dating with this guy for 4 month. At first everything were looking perfect. But for the last time he has stopped calling me as often as before. And when I call him he said that he is extremely busy or feel himself bad to meet with me. Does it mean that he doesn't want communicate with me anymore? Or he really can be busy or this is my crazy imagination?

So at school i met this girl. really pretty. i got her number and all we do is talk. her friends say that she likes me and i really like her too. so today i was at a friends house with her and we start to kiss and whatnot... we cant do anything serious around people obviously... then she texts me saying she thinks this is going too fast when we didnt really do anything. so i just dont know what to do. should i keep trying to go out with her or should i leave her alone and move on... i dont really know what she want to do either.

So I started dating this one girl about two weeks ago and just today she told me that it wasn't working and that we should stop seeing each other. Like I don't understand what happened. Everything seemed fine and I really liked her and it seemed like we were getting along. We live pretty far so we only get to see each other every so often. We have been on one date and I thought we both had a great time. We were gonna go out again the following week. All week we were talking and stuff and I made sure i asked her how her day was and said good night every night. I always let her know how much i liked her and that i would do anything to see her as often as i could even though it was far. I'm a freshman in college and she was a sophomore in high school. Im only 17 and she is 15 so their is not much of an age gap. I play guitar and i'm pretty ripped and fairly athletic (played football and wrestled in highschool) but i'm pretty shy. This was really my first relationship and I thought it was going well but I just don't know wat happened. She told me it was because of how far apart we were but I think if two people really liked each other that wouldn't matter because I really liked her and I would do anything just to see her even if it was not very often but she was worth it. Does anyone see anything that I did wrong in this relationship? Do girls hate it when a guy is too sweet or something?

And btw I can't stop thinking about her and I'm not sure if I should just completely forget about her or just see if she realizes that she made a mistake or something and comes back to me. She said that she doesn't want to lose me as a friend. Thank you all for the help. I just really don't know what to do right now.

I've known this guy for over two years. We met on an online dating site, but we maintained friendly contact despite never having actually met. Well, over such a long period of time, I developed you know--FEELINGS--for him. He was physically, mentally, and intellectually appealing to me. His humor was compatible with mine, and in short, I felt this weird and bizarre connection with him I'd never felt before. The problem was, he lived a couple hours away from me. Last year, when I was visiting friends in his area, we made plans to meet up. I texted him at around 10:30 to let him know where we were, but he told me he was already going to bed.

In short, I felt hurt and disappointed and didn't talk to him for a long time after that. I went out and dated other guys, but wasn't quite able to find the same level of interest or like I'd found with him.

Gradually we picked up randomly texting and commenting on each other's facebook statuses, and the old feelings crept back. Then, last month he called me while he was at his friend's bachelor party and told me he was sorry for his actions last year, and that he really liked me and wanted another chance to meet me.

Begrudgingly, I said fine...I figured if there was any chance of me getting over him by meeting him, I had to take it. I thought it was better to KNOW than to just wonder "what if" all the time. We called and texted every day. Our banter was enjoyable, flirty and kind of sexy at times. In short, I loved it...and I loved the attention. I liked that he was a challenge to me, and that I appeared to be a challenge to him. He told me he never met a girl he liked as much as he liked me...he said that for him, I was ideal: smart, funny, kind, cute, motivated...all that jazz. He told me I'm the kind of girl he'd love his mother to meet. We made plans to meet, and I was beyond excited. In the back of my mind though, I couldn't forget what happened last year...so I kept asking him if he was for real, if he was sure he meant what he said.

Well, of course he said he meant every word. I was on cloud 9 with the prospect that FINALLY someone I liked actually liked me in return. Then one day, right after he spent the night previously telling me how much he liked me, he calls to tell me he can't be in a relationship with me, even though he wants to be. The distance (we're about an hour and a half away) would classify it as long distance, and he said all LDR's fail. He works two jobs (one on the weekends) and I'm a full time grad student...so schedule-wise, neither of us can handle a relationship right now. He still wanted to meet me, and I him...so we went ahead with our original plans.

To sum it up, meeting him was even better than I'd hoped. I had so much fun with him and felt feelings and chemistry I never felt before and haven't felt since. He told me he couldn't be in a relationship now, but that he'd like to try again in a few months maybe. One thing led to another and I spent the night...it was amazing, and I didn't want it to end. The next day we went out to a movie and to eat. He paid for everything, but we talked more like friends than anything. When we went to say good bye, he held his arms out for a hug...so I figured that meant fine, we're definitely just friends. But then he wanted a kiss, and another...and he was concerned when I left, told me to call when I got home. He wound up calling before I had the chance to call him. I felt that overall, we were more than JUST friends.

In the time since, however...conversation has gradually died off. He still replies when I text him, but it's not as free and easy as it was in the past. It's as if we're just casual friends, and we haven't talked about our time together since that weekend when we said we'd both had a great time and that we'd do it again when our schedules permitted.

So now I'm starting to worry that maybe he was doing things with me just to be nice or worse, just to gain some sort of conquest over me. I know I let him have too much power...I think I ruined it, if there was in fact anything to actually ruin. But now I'm left pining away over someone who can't be bothered to text me or talk to me anymore. If this is how it's going to be, I want to get over him so I can move on to someone else, someone who pays attention to me and who, if nothing else, can act like a friend.

I know I told him I was okay with being just friends...and I was, but spending time with him completely backfired for me. I'm beating myself up now over how I made myself too easy for him and figure that he's simply seen all there is to see and has no further interest in me. I don't know how to get over him. I'm 24 and he's 25...so you'd think we'd be more capable of acting like grownups, but I'm rather inexperienced with actual relationships. Advice greatly appreciated.

Ok I am single guy in eastern NC and I think I have fell in love with someone but the problem is she is 951 miles away and the thing is we meet in a dating site and we talked and instantly hit it off we have the same views like the same stuff and we exchanged facebook and emails but she lives in Missouri we have talked every night for two weeks and exchanged pics of each other (not dirty) and a couple of days ago she sent a message that said "it is like we were meant to be together" and I messaged back "yea it is, your perfect for me and vise versa" then she sent a message saying "This might weird you out but I don't care I will take that risk. I love you [enter my name]" and I sent back a message that said "it does not weird me out cause I love you too" she sent back a message saying "you make me so happy we will be together some day.

Bottom line I love her I am 17 she is 16 we get that our hormones might be making us feel this way and then I thought "since we are considering our hormones are doing this it might not be" I mean we talk every day and one day she was feeling really bad and I felt so bad for her is got tears in my eyes. I think about her ALL the time when we talk I feel happy and when she is not there I feel alone. We talked about meeting once but me and her have no free time at all.

What should I do? any advice will help.

Hi Everyone

I am conducting a research project for the University of Sussex into gendered attitudes towards sex and relationships. The aim of my study is to identify whether or not there are significant differences in sexual desire between men and women, and if so what the nature of these differences is and what implications this might have.

Over the next month I will be conducting interviews online to gather data on this topic and I am posting here to see if anyone would like to take part in these interviews. These interviews will last between 20 and 45 minutes; carried out either by email or instant message (your choice) and at a time to suit you. I will only interview you about your attitudes and beliefs towards sexuality and relationships; there will be no questions on your sexual history or practices. Data from these interviews will be saved and may be featured in publications, however the identities of respondents will be kept strictly confidential.

This is an opportunity to really further our understanding of an element of humanity so central to our modern lives and one that is often neglected. It is obviously your choice to take part and no names or online identities will be referred to in the write up.

If you would like to take part or have any questions about the study please contact me by personal message or email: jf258@sussex.ac.uk.

Thank you for reading.

Try to talk to her in a friendly more so you won't suck when you are in front of her. From there, just see where things go with the both of you.

Once and for all, tell him what you really feel so you won't be having regrets. But be ready whatever his answer may be. At least, you were honest with him and with your feelings.

She must be seeing you as a friend only and she realized it quite late already. Or probably, he doesn't really like you and was just being polite in saying she doesn't wanna lose you as her friend.

I think the most important thing that counters in a date are your physical presence and behavior. For both the boys and the girls' confidence is the key to get success in this field. Be confident, try to do a decent talk. Dressed up nicely. Be kind and sweet to everyone around you. Have faith in yourself that you can win his/her heart. Know more at etiquette of first date.

So I was Facebook talking with a guy i've recently met at school. He talks to me a lot. Suddenly he jokingly said something about the compliments he'd like to hear, among which "gorgeous". I said that it surely seemed like an agreeable compliment, and he replied "come on, somebody said that to you for sure?".

Was he trying to say he finds me beautiful ?

He also asked me a few days ago if I had been a dancer as a child - while he knows this wasn't part of my childhood hobbies I believe cause we already discussed it - and said he thought so cause I have the shape/physical appearance of a dancer and that I could have been one. I was surprised, nobody ever told me such a thing, seemed quite fantasist to me.

So, what's the deal, is it a way to compliment my body shape...?

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I am a firm believer in the thinking that if a guy wants a girl, she knows it. But, one of the guys I am currently seeing, is someone I've developed a real interest in even though he's not coming at me the usual way. The situation is that since we met, he's only called every 5-6 days apart. Usually to just touch base. And the 3 "meet ups" we've had over the course of a month and a 1/2 have been short-notice and were long, 6-7 hours and he paid. He has been working nights since we'd met and so the time to call/see each other has been limited. He also plays on a golf league on Saturday mornings and spends every other Sunday afternoon with his grandson. So, I've been lenient so to speak about it. Usually, I'd have moved on by now. But, he seems like a stand up guy based on all our conversations.

So, Saturday night, we got together and it was 1:30 am when we decided to go home. We were not drunk, by the way. Anyway, he walks me to his car and says to me "I want to take this to another level with you". Now, mind you I'm tired now (which would be a reason for keeping dates shorter) and probably not thinking on my feet as well as I could have. Nevertheless, I just said, I'd like that and recapped my schedule. We'd been talking about that earlier. Now, in my mind, my idea of the next level from what we'd been doing, would be a more formal dating scenario, more frequent calls (once or twice a week), more frequent/scheduled dates.

I'm kicking myself for not using that opportunity to let him know what my dating goals are and what another level means to me. It's not a lost cause, the door is still open, I've just delayed it. Nevertheless, the thought crossed my mind, that maybe he was thinking about that moment -- he wanted a more passionate kiss than we'd had before or go back to his place. But his actions didn't come across that way. My answer gave a green light for something else anyway. But he simply moved in and gave a kiss that was more than a peck but less than passionate and he came in for the same thing a second time when I opened my car door to get in.

The reason I'm confused here is that I've never been asked for just a kiss with that specific statement/question. That specific statement/question has always been about exclusivity or engagement, marriage. Do you guys use that kind of statement for a way to get more passionate in some way? Usually a guy just goes for it and I will return it if I want that or I'll purse my lips or turn my cheek.

I am going to wait until he calls me again and address it then. I'm sure he knew what he meant and doesn't know I'm confused about it. But, I'm still wondering if I just missed the cue for that moment.

Jessica:

You need to establish for yourself what your dating goals are first and make some ground rules to follow. Ideally, would you rather have a man pursue you or do you like that role? If you want the man to pursue, always leave the ball in his court. In this case, you've send an indicator of interest, now you wait to hear from him again. Don't email or contact him first. Respond to his replies and then wait for him.

If you like the role of the pursuer, that's ok, but you will attract men who like that too and typically they will disappear as quickly as they showed up especially after they get what they want. That is just a typical scenario in that case. You being the pursuer makes it a little more difficult to know which guys will be a serious dating prospect or not. It can happen, you just have to be more observant, be on your game so to speak all the time.

If you draw the man to you and he is doing the pursuing in all the right ways, you'll know pretty quickly, if they are serious or not. They will call often, schedule regular dates. If they don't, then there's something is up with them.

Let this guy take the lead.

Getting into another relationship was something out of question for me. I previously had a breakup and I was least interested in getting into a new one. But It was a little difficult to convince my parents.They wanted me to settle down as soon as possible.I finally got obliged to their desires and I contacted a matchmaking service at Thornhill (Premier Introductions). I never ever imagined that my life would change so drastically. In the beginning I was given a counseling that had changed my concepts on love and marriage. And very soon I met the man of my life. A charming personality, a man who is generous with his time and wisdom. He always makes me feel special. A perfect gentleman, who knows how to manage both work and private life together. I might have started everything on a very compulsive note, but it has all ended up into the greatest good in my life. We are getting married and I feel to be at the top of the world now.

I met a guy that just got out of a 7 year relationship. He took me out on dates, and we did have sex. He texted me every day and he told me he liked me a lot. One day he was acting distant and said "we need to work on your throat skills. it's called deep throat for a reason." I was hurt and stopped answering him that day and then things seemed to get a little better. Then he started acting distant again and wasn't answering me, so I went crazy and texted him 50 times. He told me he was done with me, but about a week later I reached out to him and we grabbed lunch. He told me he missed me and he paid and we didn't have sex. A few days later he told me he doesn't want a relationship, doesn't know what he wants and doesn't wanna lead me on. I asked if he had feelings for me and he said "I did have feelings, not gonna sleep with someone I don't have feelings for." About a week later I had a weak moment and asked if he wanted to have sex. Before we met up he seemed hesitant and said "I want to so badly but I don't want you throwing it in my face that all I wanted was sex from you." and then he said "I don't want you thinking this is anything more than what it is." We met up and had sex and then he asked me to go to lunch. He holds my hand and then was kissing me in the street. The next day I asked him to meet up and have sex and he said "can't have class" so I said "when can you" he said "Idk shay I'm in class can't really talk." So I asked if he wanted to still have sex with me in general, and he never answered. Later that night I apologized for even asking and he said "it's ok babe." it's been two weeks and I haven't heard from him.

1. was he just using me for sex or did he have any feelings for me?
 2. why isn't he contacting me and will he ever contact me again?
 3. did he not want a relationship in general, or is this my fault and he doesn't want a relationship with me?

I feel incredibly stupid even asking but I'm going for it anyway... This guy is incredibly hard to read. He seems really cautious around me; I feel perhaps it's a defense mechanism from getting too close to me. We definitely have a connection; both intellectual and an intense physical attraction.

The other night he sent me a song he sang and played on his guitar; just a short clip of a romantic song. I loved it of course. But then the next day he was "liking" some other girl's photos (innocent photos, i. e. no bikini shots or anything sexual in nature).

Am I reading too much into his "liking" her photos? I feel like he let down his guard in a big way by singing to me (he's a pretty guarded person) and I made sure to let him know how appreciative I was... Am I just being too much of a girl here?

I'm sorry to say it sweetheart, but he sounds kind of like a douche. That deep throat comment? Really?

7 years is a LONG time to be in a relationship with someone and it sounds like he's confused and unsure of what he wants. He may have had feelings for you at one point or he might not have; you might never know.

You didn't do anything wrong. You don't know what's going on in his mind or his life. The possibilities of what's going on are endless and you'll drive yourself mad if you focus on it and try to dissect every single nuance and word that he's said during your time together. It sounds like he's pulling away for whatever reason. But try, TRY not to take it as a rejection on you or try not to let it be any reflection on you as a person. We often tie our identities into other people's opinions of us; something I'm still trying to work on too. Just try to focus on you. Be selfish. Go out and meet other people. Enjoy yourself. Indulge. Try not to pin all your hopes on one person until it's obvious that they are committed to you...

"On the first day talk to the old, guy was next to me during youth, but when I was in danger and I needed you,where are you?"

The last time dressing changes, the doctor told me that, because of my deep wounds without scarring, the scar will be quite large. I looked down at my hands, the fingers still long and lean, hands still put up to wipe the tears, hands often find a place to base on, now, no place was unhurt. Suddenly feeling very frustrated about that. But it does not matter, I still live with the larger scars in my soul

I have construction that has been going on by my house for a couple of months. I noticed one of the workers driving by my house when I was outside looking at me throughout the day. When I drive past the construction area and he sees me he would stop what he is doing and look at me. I am at the light and he is turning the corner with his work truck he slows down turns and looks at me. I am at the stop sign and the same thing happens. I have waved to him a few times and one day he walked by and I said hi and he said hi back. I felt time was going by and I needed to do something maybe he thought I was not available or maybe he is to shy to say anything. I am to shy to approach so I thought about it and one night I left a note on his work truck asking if he would like to go out sometime. I did not leave my number because I was afraid someone else might get it but it's obvious that it is me because I said that I live down the street and you often go by my house and we see one another. (There are not many houses on my street and I am the only one outside)I know he got this note because he is the only one that drives this truck and he was the first one there that morning. I left the note about three weeks ago and one week they were not there. So this week would be about 2 weeks. I still see him drive by and look even if I am not outside so I guess I didn't scare him off and when I pass the construction area sometimes he sees me and he looks. I was driving home today and he was stopped on my street getting back into his truck we both looked at one another. He has seen me outside the past few weeks and looks. Once again I am to shy to say anything to him but one of these days I may just say that it was me that left that note when he drives by!!! Why is it when he drives by he looks all to see if he sees me and when he does see me he does not say anything. Maybe it was just flirting but why keep looking at one another or maybe I should give him more time or maybe nothing will ever come out of this situation. I would have thought something would have happened by now. I just don't know what to think or do going forward.

Hi,

Thanks for sharing your story on LiveDating Forum.

From what you have described it looks like he hasn't got the note.
Probably he just missed it or something.

Why don't you just go ahead and talk to him?
Just ask how the construction goes, talk about the weather and a few other things.
Meanwhile you should make it clear for yourself where you like him and what are your expectations out of this.

Again, based on what you've mentioned, its very hard to make any conclusions.

P.S. Probably you should not mention the note when you talk to him.

Please keep us updated on how it develops. And good luck

My opinion is that a perfect date is a time when everything goes naturally and flows. Conversation doesn't lull too much and there's just the right amount of flirting.

Take your girl to somewhere special, be a gentleman, and be interesting. And at the end, if you're really wanting to kiss her, then you could say something cute that suggests a kiss. But asking isn't very spontaneous. Just go for it.

P.s. if you want a kiss compliment her, make her feel comfortable, but don't make it so obvious you want a kiss, girls can pick up on that.

By the way, what's your attitude to spontaneous kisses?

Actions speak louder than words, but not nearly as often. Anyway, people trust actions, not words. If you tell her you love her, miss her, like her whatever, she won't believe you until your actions prove it. And the last thing: I want to ask you something. You created this topic 4 years ago, so how are you feeling now? Was it worth your efforts?

I don't understand why people register on a dozen of sites. Don't you think it's better to sign up one site and responsibly treat it, improve your rate and find your potential partner. Than sing up hundreds of sites and even forget the passwords from all of them? So why then you actually registrate?

Ready to show your beloved the depth of your feelings? It's high time to write a romantic letter? Don't be in panic! You don't need to be an outstanding writer to create something special, your own kind of masterpiece. You have emotions as well, and these are your emotions, pure and generous. So you can create this letter! Of course, crafting the perfect gift is a bit more complicated than scribbling down words. Anyway, don't be in panic and read this article: 7 tips for writing a romantic letter first of all you must understand that in front of you is the human, made of muscles and bones, which also has its weaknesses and preferences.

Today we have the Internet, so you can, before you go on a date, or even a make friends for the first time or start to chat with someone, find out about this person at least anything. as they say, "Forewarned is forearmed." so you will always feel yourself comfortable.
Another thing that has a value for every a woman is her underwear and hygiene. Yes -Yes. And it's not funny. always keep yourself clean and tidy, and underwear in a befitting way. This will give your confidence 100500 plus. And I'm not kidding. Just try it. You'll feel your confidence and it will be transmitted to people. And the people will feel your wild magnetism.

I believe that we build our own destiny. Everything in life happens because of or in spite of our actions. This is a destiny. So if you brought your destiny, then why not to take a chance? He likes you, you like him. It's simple. Talk.

Moreover, this is online dating. If you don't like something, you can stop the communication any time. Ban or something like that. So I advise you to act. Write.

In addition, men are very slow-witted, and good men are more often indecisive.

I have no doubt that you two are in love. LOVE continues to evolve as you get older. The connection is real. You have a lot of life ahead of you both and no one knows how / when this will play out, but I promise you (as SteveMarker said) stay in touch with her. Make sure you are a great LONG DISTANCE) friend to her. One day you may be within proximity of each other to give it a real try. Life is funny that way and you will be surprised at how valuable it can be to have a friend that is always on your side even if she is 951 miles away.

Good luck, breathe, life will work itself out.

It might be too fast for her, if you like her, let her set the pace. If she wants to just hold hands then do it without any pressure to do more. Comfort and speed are subjective to the person, be respectful of her and let it happen in its own time.

If you keep interest about women psychology, you should know that the thesis that "A woman loves with her ears" still works. Yes, like everybody knows about it, but usually ignore this advice, whether it seems not so significant ...

BUT absolutely anyone, and women in particular, focuses on that specific, real alive interest.

So, dear boys and men, make more compliments, learn more about the psychology of women, do not dare to rest on the laurels and will reward your efforts ... the desired effects. No song, no supper.

Many people think that nowadays, when everyone is busy and running around their business, to find a nice guy for a serious relationship is impossible. But not all so sad as it seems at first glance. In any case, it's much easier for the girls to find a life-partner than for guys.

First, you should decide: What do you really want?

Think about your ex-boyfriends. What were they?

Think of all your friends. Who do you think stands out?

You might find that you like the blue-eyed blondes.

Get out of your comfort zone!

Break your routine! Maybe that's where you never go, you will approach a guy the love of your life.

Be more sociable and smile.

Talk to people. Do not afraid of people. Make new acquaintances!

Finally, open your eyes, half of the population is men.

You do not need to think about where and how to find a guy, you just should think about how to create the right situation to let the guy found you. And sitting at home, you will not give him that opportunity.

SO what did you actually do, tell me plz?

If you want to win a precious time and try to build your relationship, pay attention to the signals that he sends via behavior.

1. He calls you less
2. It stopped being affectionate
3. You do not seem to talk at all
4. He seems to be indifferent
5. He became irritable to not to say "intolerable"
6. He delays at work
7. You spend less time together
8. You do(almost) not to have sex
9. He openly flirts with other girls
10. He is going to "live apart" - if you already live together

But why are you asking? Just the live interest? Or you really have problems?

LeePalm44 wrote on Thu, 14 January 2016 09:58 he might have left because of another woman, because he wants his freedom, or just because he is an asshole

If your man decides to break up with you, do not rush into a panic, cry all nights long, drink antidepressants and tearfully begged him to stay. It is necessary to switch on the common sense, even though it is not easy, and to answer two questions: "What is the reason?" And "Should I return him?". Remember, the man will never just leave, there is always a reason.

Perhaps the man is not created for a serious relationship by nature. Your man rushes headlong into a new "love affair", completely forgetting about his family and then to satisfy his passion and his ambition is back to you, claiming that it was the last time. Obviously, the last time there will never be, such a character of the man, it will go away permanently, consider whether it is necessary to you? Is it worth fighting for?

He fell in love with another woman, cheated you and leaves you for her? Do you want to continue the relationship with a man who preferred another woman, and openly declared it to you?

"Do real friends exist?"

If the true friendship was not exist, then the world drowned in war and mayhem ... But true friendship at the present time is a rare phenomenon. You can seem to be best friend, but do not actually be. True friendship is primarily the trust that the person you consider a friend, do not leave you and do not betray you in a difficult moment, will keep secret that you told him. A true friend never advise anything wrong and will try to do everything to make you feel better. Yes, there is always someone who can be called a true friend on Earth. During your entire life, you will overcome difficult obstacles in your way together. A true friend is forever, no matter what happens!

Choose friends carefully.

why do you want to depend on somebody? It's your life and only you who is responsible for it! Try to make money by yourself. All rich people who are the owners of corporations were students as well as you and they also wanted to have money and this motivated them to start their business. If you really think that you are smart, prove, first of all not to the society, but for yourself that you really deserve this studying, you are the important part of the society, you can be responsible for your education, for your living and your future!

Does this man suits you? Starting a new relationship, we always think about this, like is this what we were looking for? We try to evaluate our new lover, to weigh the pros and cons to see whether to continue the development of these relations. But next to you there is a young man who completely suits you. How to understand this is he whom you searched.

1. You have no reticence in conversation.
2. You really evaluate all the flaws.
3. The man willing to put up with your shortcomings.
4. Even in the most difficult periods of the relationship you still forgive the man.
5. You have a common topic of conversation.
6. You feel happy.

Good luck

i thought he was cool with everything..we're just as close as we wr before,but later i realized he was pretty upset cuz i 'rejected' him cuz wen i asked him if he wanted to hang out...i even said i wanted it to be just the two of us...n he said " no..cuz he has got plans"..."ok..next time then" i said in reply....."or maybe never " he said and turned to look at the reaction on my face ...but words never really get to me...so i simply said "whatever"and laughed..i've known him for four years now..we r in the same university..same class..he never really minds when m rude..tact aint my stong suit anyway...

A year has passed and everything is going well for me....but things seem pretty messed up between him and i..he has been keeping his distance these past 2 months..i miss him

Thing is i do have feelings for him..feelings i never had for anyone before...

If i do tell him how i feel would he think i'm just trying to get him back cuz i like the attention he pays me ...would i look desperate.....or what if he just laughs in my face..i'm so confused what does he want me to say or do,,?plz help!

The dating sites in Australia offer valid and useful services to singles on a search for their partner in this busy life. It's better to be clear with the sites rules and regulations before opting for a premium membership. We can state in one sentence that such sites are true friends in the moment of crucial decision of choosing the right partner for your own self.

Guys, I'm looking for some advice here. My boyfriend has a female best friend. I am generally fine with my boyfriends having female friends, even when I can sense some kind of attraction or flirting; this doesn't tend to threaten me because it seems harmless. BUT, my current boyfriend has this best friend who he was roommates with in college, they dated briefly, hooked up on and off after that, and still talk on the phone and text pretty regularly. To me, this is a whole other level of friendship. I've asked him to just tone it down; talk on the phone a whole lot less, stop texting so much. She lives out of town and has visited a few times; she's really cool and maybe I could try being friends with her if she lived here, but she doesn't live here. I know that he "loves" her, but I feel like he is "in love" with her. He said that he put the idea of them being together out of his head a long time ago (because she isn't good at relationships) and that I have nothing to worry about. He hasn't changed their level of communication at all. He said he would likely be uncomfortable if the situation was reversed, but he's not willing to change anything because his friendship with this other girl is important to him; he doesn't have guy friends that close. She usually is the one to initiate a lot of their communication, and he isn't willing to not engage with her every time.

Guys, is there any way this is just a friendship without the hope of something more? I've always been fine with guys and girls being friends, but I've never been in a situation where my boyfriend is BEST friends with a girl. I feel like when heterosexual guys and girls are besties, that one of them is "in love" and just sticking it out. If they talked every few months on the phone and texted a few times a month, that'd be different and fine. I'd have fun when she visited rather than anxious and uncomfortable.

I mean, all people are different and have different sense of who's "attractive" and who's not. I know that could sound weird because mass-media has set certain standards, which most people think they should align to. But in the real life it's much more diverse.

How about you focus on establishing relationship first, and not think about "can get sex or not." ? I mean focus on friendship as a first step. At least you will find good friends. And who knows, maybe it will transform into something else..

During our meetings, I've noticed that this guy never fails to sit next to me. I would sometimes try to find a different spot to sit at, but he continues to sit next to me anyways. If he isn't able to sit next to me at all, he stares at me when I'm not even speaking or doing anything. He has also said me once at the end of one of our meetings, "I hope you enjoy the warm weather, such as yourself." But then he quickly changed the ending of it by saying, "such as today." He mirrors my actions, facial expressions, and words a lot and doesn't do it with others in the group. He also tries to find things in common with me. For example, I told him once that I have Greek ancestry. Then, he told me that he was Greek too even though he has told me multiple times in the past that he only has Russian ancestry. I'm a single woman in my 20's and he's in his 40's and married. Why does he keep doing this?

I think there could be two possibilities:

1. He likes you and tries to flirt with you in a special way.

Maybe he even uses use some NLP stuff to establish a rapport with you. BTW those tricks were quite popular in Russian-speaking countries about a decade ago.

2. He's just trying to have fun, but have some sort of what I call "social stupidity" i.e. he doesn't know what's really fun and what's not. But it's kind of weird to do that in 40s

Assuming that you don't want to start romantic relationship with him, I'd suggest to wait some time and observe for now.

When you notice that he does something like that again, probably in a more explicit way, you can just tell him that you don't like it, in a polite but firm way.

If that doesn't work, I'd treat that as harassment and report him to your manager or HR.

I believe, key is that you feel confident that you can stop those things in one or another way. In most cases that sort of people will just feel your confidence and stop doing those stupid things.

Let us know if that makes sense.

This is long, sorry!

I (38)have been together with my boyfriend (38) for 11 years. I lost my job and had to look for a new one, after a year of searching I finally found one but in the capital 3 hours away by car.

we decided he would follow me. Shortly after I moved he got a promotion. I was happy and foolishly told him he doesn't need to move immediately, he could stay for a year to get more experience so he could get the same type of work after moving.

We grew apart, then we were on a break according to me, but he understood it as a break up.

Many months later I tell him I want to try again, he is unsure and keeps me waiting and hoping for his decision for many months, finally he told he had met someone but it was not serious. I was a mess and took it upon me to try to fix all past problems, I even offered to move back. He eventually said yes and that he had broke it off with the girl he was seeing.

Shortly after I had a very violent trauma in my life, violent loss of brother, I became suicidal and had high anxiety and had to have sick leave. Yet I was really trying to work hard on the relation, to smile, to always be interested in him, supportive, etc., but he was cold, distant, and often got snappy with me. I spent most of that time at his place.

He got somewhat better after a year, then I found out from the girl he had supposedly broken up with that he was still seeing her.

I confronted him, He told me he was trying to break up with her but she wouldn't have it, crying hysterically, he didn't know how to handle the situation. He also had told her that he had gotten back with me still as things were not really over between them, so he felt he hadn't been fair to her, and that he was with her when I sort of insisted we could try again. So she was actually the victim. But that he wanted to be with me, he loved me, yet he understood that maybe I wouldn't want that now.

I truly believe he has a very hard time breaking up with someone. His plan was to drag it out and hope the other person would get tired.

We had a long talk, then we decided we would try to overcome this. He stopped having contact with her.

went back to his city and spent many more months there, but visit my place at the capital every now and then for a short time. But now the problem is I When I try to explain it would be easier if he moved he always gets angry, telling me different non convincing reasons. Recently he said his job was more important because he was working for an international organization while I am not. and that would give us possibility to move abroad.

I told him that with his background it is much easier for him to find a job than me, and he admitted, and in the bigger capital where I am there are many more possibilities than the small city he is in, my bigger city is the capital so there is no shortage of international companies and headquarters and high management/sales positions. In addition I am still in a difficult position with PTSD, anxiety, depression, and horrible guilt and regret. I need my close friends especially since I don't have a family so my friends are my family, and they live in the capital not his city.

I also need to continue see my therapist who have been a lifeline, and my therapist is at the capital and I can't imaging start all over with a new one and going over the traumatic experience I had from the start. My therapist said after a trauma like mine she wouldn't recommend a new challenge as a new job until I have progressively slowly started increasing working from 25% to 100 % and been on 100% for 6 months.

Also my work knows about the trauma and have been understanding and patient and willing to accept my long sick leave as well as me starting slowly part time. A new company would not be so understanding, and I would have to work 100% immediately and convince them why I am better than all other applicants and act positive and curious and very engaged, to prove I am worthy of a long term contract. Mentally I am just really nowhere near that strong. I also told him that during the hardest period of my life that I do not wish on any human being, he was cold with me and busy taking romantic trips with his other girlfriend. If he was truly sorry, how about moving to the capital where I have my job and friends and where he probably would even find better opportunities?

No. He made it very clear he won't budge.

I literally get an even worse depression in his town. Already I am dealing with a lot after my brother, and being so isolated there makes it even harder. He is gone all days till about 20:30 in the evening on week days, and I am just at his place alone with my sorrow and anxiety.

He keeps telling me I had promised I could move, and all what happened since then which make it so much harder, doesn't make him budge.

I would really appreciate some inputs from outside. Am I being unreasonable? Am I unreasonable feeling let down/ that he is being too harsh and cold because he is so inflexible when it comes to moving or even looking for possible jobs in my city? Is it reasonable that we live forever only where he wants? Especially since he even said he doesn't have anything particularly against living in the capital in general, and he was prepared to leave his town and job for another country and job (was a job offer from a joint venture of his current company) a bit earlier, if I had agreed to move with him?

Am I unfairly asking for much?

TL;DR : had promised my long distance boyfriend I'd move to his town, after a traumatic loss of my brother leaving me with PTSD, depression, anxiety , needing my supportive friends in my town, and mentally unable to work full time, which would be required if I am to work in his town, as well as finding out he was unfaithful with his ex in the worst year of my life and was cold and even rude with me, he always gets angry when I tell him it's easier if he moves to me and insists it's his way or no way. Am I, or him, unreasonable? Opinion/advice?

Thanks

This guy who I had a few dates with last year responded to my text to catch up with an enthusiastic yes.

He also mentioned that he had a girlfriend and would have to ask her but that it shouldn't be too much of an issue. I did not know about the girlfriend. Now I am wondering about his intentions.

We did really like each other but had to stop seeing each other because it became a long-distance relationship.

Now I am moving back to where he lives hence why I texted to catch up as friends. I don't understand why you would want to meet with an ex if you are happy in your relationship.

I don't want to hurt anyone by agreeing to meet. Should I meet with him?

What do you think are his intentions?

I met an Aquarius guy who had a 2 year old daughter at my friends house. His uncle lived next door to her. The first day we met we clicked. We talked about different things and laughed and had great chemistry. We hung out every weekend for the first 3 weeks but barely texted throughout the week. We had sex the 4th time we hung out and I didn't expect nothing to come out of it, I just saw it as a fling. The next day after having sex, I didn't reach out because I knew he was spending time with his daughter. He texted me at 10pm and said "You weren't gonna check on me?" I said I thought about it but didn't because I knew you was with your daughter. After that day we talked on the phone EVERYDAY and it was regular calls, he always wanted to facetime. He initiated all calls and most of the texting. Sometimes I texted but was hesitant to be the first to call because I didn't wanna appear clinging. We spoke about houses, careers, shopping, news, finances, school and past relationships. One thing I noticed is that he always accused me of having other guys but I never said yes or no because we were both single and I didn't feel we needed to disclose that because we should just be focused on each other (sidebar: I wasn't talking to anyone but him). After a month and a half of talking/hanging out, I was with my bestfriend working out and he called me, I didn't answer because we were using my phone for workouts. I called him back 30 mins later and he declined the call so I assumed he was busy. All night he posted on social media, so I texted him and asked him why he didn't call me back and he told me I should've picked up when he called. I told him I was busy and he said I should picked up or texted him saying that. That rubbed me the wrong way but we had a conversation about it the next day and smooth things over. A week later he put me on facetime with his daughter twice and we was chatting and it made me think "does he like me? Or is he doing that with everyone?" but I just went with it. A couple of days later, on a wednesday, we were talking and he said he wanted to see me on Friday. I saw sure we can have a movie night with food. He said "I didn't choose Saturday because I know you have your other boos" I said I don't know why you are saying that, if you want to ask me if im talking to other guys then ask. He said no im not gonna ask cause I don't want to get my feelings involved. That upset me because what were we doing? So I said good night ill talk to you tomorrow. Thursday comes I didn't hear from him and I didn't reach out. Friday comes and I still didn't hear from him so around 7pm I call him saying I wanted to check on him and wanted to know if we were still hanging out. He said "why didn't you call me yesterday" I said why didn't you call me? I told him that I know he had his daughter yesterday and took her to the pool so I was giving him space. He said " no you were with her Thursday boo" I told him he needs to stop with these comments. And he said, Ill play my role. I then asked him " if I didn't call him would he ever have called me" and he said no. I told him that's immature and he told me to hush. So I said, ill call you later and he hung up on me. 1 hour later I texted him telling him that ill let the hang up slide because I could tell he was upset for no reason but I'd still like to see him. The text didn't go through. I called and HE BLOCKED ME. I saw he was posting on Social media and DMed and saying " idk what your issue is but I'm going to give you a chance to fix things between us or we don't have to talk anymore". He said "give me a chance? You're bugging". A day passed by and I was still blocked so I DMed him again and said "can you unblock me so we can talk" and he read the message and didn't respond. Another day passed by and I started getting block calls, I didn't answer but I knew in my heart it was him. Then later that night I got a text from him asking "Whats going on at the neighbors house?" because my friend lived next door to his uncle. I ignored it. The a week later he texted me "WOW" 3 hours later I responded and said "wow what?" and he never answered. Its been 2 days of no response.

What is going on with him? Should i just forget him or try to reach out once more?
