Subject: My fiance left me cause I wanted her to sign a pre-nup, was that asking too much?

I was wondering if maybe that was unfair of me, or I was asking too much. It's just that she literally has no money where as I would be bringing a lot into the marriage, including my house and my own home started business.

Plus she has been going through a lot of financial issues, such as not being able to afford paying her bills on her job, and has asked me to help pay them. Not that's bad or anything. I love her and want to help out, and support her. That's fine. But she had some arguments about how I spend my money a while back, and she wanted me to help her out more. We came to a compromise, but I did feel that maybe having to help her out a lot, was kind of a concern to take into account.

But when it comes to the actual marriage, was asking her to sign one bad, even if I help her out with her money troubles, and do things for her already? Was she perhaps overreacting to throw the relationship and the upcoming marriage away, just like that?
