Don't you just sitting home by yourself on a Saturday night? It used to happen to me all the time and wow did it get frustrating after awhile. I tried finding new friends and activities to do but nothing really seem to stick. Hoping to get some good advice on what to do during the weekends when your single and not that social of a person. Any suggestions out there? I recently started using the Blinddate dating App "The Blinddate Hour" anonymous chatting at 9 PM EST, everyday and have started to build a few relationships that may start keeping me busier. It seems like chatting to new people might finally be breaking me out of my shell.
